How to Mint an NFT

By Chris Campbell

“Why My EV Is About to Be Obsolete”

In my new video, I reveal why and why this is the biggest opportunity yet in electric vehicles (EV). A former Tesla employee just released a brand-new innovation promising to make every EV out there instantly obsolete, setting up a new market 10X bigger than EV's — and you can buy in right away. Click here to see how you could profit.

Last week, I sold the first NFT tied to my upcoming book. (The first book ever sold exclusively through NFTs.)

The NFT itself is a pixelated version of the book cover.

Synopsis: How a 2 billion-year-old stone (shungite/Genesis Stone) and an ancient space-faring molecule (C60/God Molecule) helped with the rise of life on Earth... and what this means about the Universe-at-large and your unique place in it.

(Note: By the way, I'm writing and self-publishing the book with the help of Altucher and his self-publishing course.)

How to Mint an NFT

Here's why you should consider minting an NFT...

Even if you hate NFTs.

If you follow along -- and mint one NFT -- you'll know more about the future of the Internet than 99% of the world. Guaranteed.

It's perhaps the best introduction to what's being called "Web 3.0".

I'll reveal...

1.] What I did.

2.] How I did it.

3.] And a step-by-step tutorial.

Let's get started.

What I did.

The NFT you saw above is what's called a "digiphysical." Or NFTs tied to a specific physical product.

An example of digiphysicals: In the future, when a teenager buys a pair of sneakers, it will come with an NFT that can be worn in his favorite video game or in the Metaverse. This concept can be applied to any physical product.

Right now it's just a mildly interesting way of selling physical products. (But also a great potential way to amplify a side hustle.)

I had an artist on Fiverr do the artwork. And I'm printing pre-release copies of my book through Createspace.

With digital art going ballistic right now, digiphysicals are rearing up for a hype cycle. I want to catch this trend with a glove the size of Pluto.

How I did it.

Here's how you do it step-by-step.

I'll explain each step below.

1. Set up a Coinbase account.
2. Buy about $100 Ethereum.
3. Hire an artist on Fiverr. (Or do the art yourself.)
4. Set up Metamask wallet in your browser
5. Transfer the ETH from Coinbase to your Metamask wallet
6. Go to OpenSea.io and link your Metamask wallet
7. Pay the initial account fee (fluctuates depending on Ethereum gas prices)
8. Set up a collection on OpenSea.
9. Create new NFTs in that collection, edit the NFT descriptions, publish them, sell them... profit.
10. There's no cost to mint on Opensea, but it does charge you a fee on the final sale price. Pro-tip: You can set up a royalty on resales of your NFTs. Meaning, if a buyer later sells it, whatever % you set the royalty to will go automatically into your wallet.

The Grave Has Already Been Dug Reader

Reader, you'd have to be blind not to see that the stock market is completely divorced from the economic reality...

We have record unemployment, the millions of jobs lost in the pandemic aren't coming back, and now Biden and Co. are running up the debt faster than any administration in history...

And as the stock market continues to hit new highs... the REAL economy digs itself deeper and deeper into a recession...

But you can't fake a recovery...

Which means Reader, that the grave has already been dug... And the stock market is just a deadman walking...

All it would take is a tiny push to send us spiraling over the edge into the abyss.

And on September 20, 2021... THIS Monday... it looks like we just might get it.

[\[Click here to see why we might be on the verge of the biggest stock market sell-off in history and how you could protect yourself.\]](#)

The Steps.

First, I opened up a Metamask account.

Metamask is the gateway to the decentralized web. You use it to interact with Web 3.0 -- an array of decentralized apps (Dapps) and crypto-based marketplaces and exchanges. In plain terms, it's a cryptocurrency wallet you download to your browser that interacts with specific websites.

Web3 tools like Metamask get rid of the need for passwords, login names, and giving up your private information. You log into the site by connecting Metamask. Your crypto address is your “login name.”

Download Metamask here.

Step 1. Install Metamask on your browser. It works on Chrome, Firefox, Opera, and Brave.

Step 2. Create an account. Click on the extension icon in the upper right corner of your browser to open Metamask. You’ll be asked to create a password and write down your seed phrase. Your seed phrase is a 12-word code that unlocks your wallet. Write it down. Keep it safe.

Step 3. Deposit funds. If you have any Ethereum, send it to the address provided in your Metamask account. (If you don’t have Ethereum, buy it on Coinbase.)

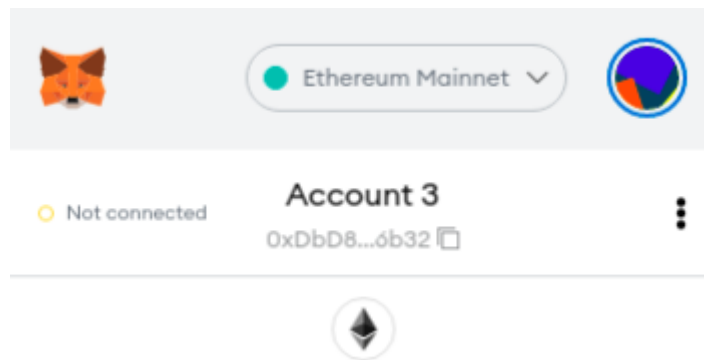

You'll need Metamask to mint your NFTs on Opensea -- the world's largest NFT marketplace.

Next, go to Opensea.

(site: Opensea.io)

Step 4. Connect your Metamask to Opensea.

To connect, open Metamask and click that little button that says “Not connected.”

Then, click “Connect.”

[Recommended Article] AI is not a Zero-Sum Game | Gilder's Daily Prophecy

It might tell you to connect through the website. If so, look for a “connect wallet” button on Opensea.

When you get a green light, you're connected!

Once connected, you can edit and customize your page.

Here's what my new Opensea page looks like.

Step 5. Mint your NFT.

Now it's time to mint your first NFT.

At the top of the page, you'll see a “Create” button.

Click that.

From there, you can upload your image, give it a name, and describe it.

There are a lot of options on the Create page, but don't worry about all of that stuff now. (You can always edit later.)

(For mine, I added "Locked content." That way, when someone buys the NFT, they unlock the instructions on how to claim their book.)

Click "Create" at the bottom to publish.

Once your NFT is created, go to the NFT's page, double-check everything is correct, and if you're ready, hit "Sell."

Name your price and you're done.

Bam. Congrats. You have a freshly minted NFT.

Welcome to Web 3.0.

Until tomorrow,
